Activities in a lesson:

Music Literacy

Through a variety of musical activities, children will learn pitch awareness, musical concepts and rhythm notation. Through sing-alongs, children are introduced to new words and vocabulary, often ones that rhyme or repeat, which makes them easy for your child to learn. Specific learning outcomes will be reinforced through written activity sheets.

Singing

Research has shown that through singing, children learn that music expresses their feelings and ideas. Singing not only teaches your child about tone, beat and rhythm but also encourages creativity and self-expressiveness.

Art & Craft

At the end of lessons, a simple craft activity will be included. Most often, props made during these sessions can then be taken home to encourage children to practice with the CD provided.

Storytelling

Fun with Composers brings classical music to life with a unique union of story and song in an appealing interactive approach. Dancing Bugs, Ringmasters and Snobby Pears are just a few of the fascinating characters unveiled in the power of storytelling in our lessons. Children are drawn comfortably into the intriguing world of classical music through well-known pieces as they quickly embrace drama, songs, movements, instrumental play and art.

Pretend & Play

It has been proven by experts that when based upon a child's real life experiences, Dramatic playing of fascinating characters integrated in unique union of story and song helps a child develop social, emotional, sensory, motor, cognitive and language skills. Through Orff and Leban methods assimilated into lessons, Children will develop active listening, natural bodily responses to music and their ability to use creative language or actions for self-expression.
